

Shakespeare on Film: A Bibliography

The analysis of Shakespearean screen adaptations as cultural appropriations of the play text is, undoubtedly, one of the areas in the field of Shakespeare studies that have experienced a spectacular increase in scholarly publications in the last few years. Nowadays, with the recent release of Kenneth Branagh's In a Bleak Midwinter (1995) and, above all, his four-hour-long, star-studded Hamlet (1996) and Al Pacino's very personal vision of Richard III (Looking for Richard), 1996, Shakespeare adaptations seem to enjoy a moment of immense popularity in the box office. Indeed, after a very bleak period in the late seventies and early eighties, the commercial success of such films as Branagh's Henry V (1989) and Much Ado about Nothing (1993) and Franco Zeffirelli's Hamlet (1990) has opened up the way for new possibilities in the process of the cultural transfer of Shakespeare's plays to the film medium.

Although Shakespearean screen versions are almost as old as cinema itself (the first film based on a play by Shakespeare—Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree's King John—dates from 1899), scholars did not pay much critical attention to them and often denigrated the directors for their liberties with Shakespeare. This situation lasted well up to the late forties, when the adaptations made by Laurence Olivier and Orson Welles received widespread praise both as films and as interpretations of the plays. Nevertheless, the first periodical covering this field, Shakespeare on Film Newsletter, was not founded until 1976 and only the publication in 1987 of a volume of Shakespeare Survey entirely devoted to Shakespeare on film and television marks the starting-point of an area that has proved really influential in providing new alternatives to our understanding of the plays. A few books on the subject had previously appeared—Robert Hamilton Ball's Shakespeare on Silent Film (1968; B7 in the present bibliography) or Jack Jorgens's Shakespeare on Film (1977; B47)—but the book-length studies published since 1988, the articles in such periodicals as Literature/Film Quarterly and Shakespeare on Film Newsletter, and the creation of two editorial series on Text and Performance testify to the critical development in this field.

This bibliography is intended to provide a reference guide to the publications dealing with Shakespeare on film and is fairly complete until 1994, adding a few items reprinted in 1995. Its scope is limited to studies of the relationship between literature and cinema and does not include references to Shakespearean derivatives or 'offshoots' (e.g. A Double Life, Forbidden Planet, Joe Macbeth), musical versions or operas based on the plays. Reasons of space have also excluded television and stage productions on video, except those which were filmed and later released commercially. The present bibliography is intended to be as comprehensive as possible, but certain types of entries such as dissertations and abstracts have been omitted. Reviews are not usually included, except those later reprinted in books or in the case of very recent films or adaptations that have hardly received any critical attention (Paul Czinner's As You Like It or Stuart Burge's Julius Caesar, just to mention a couple of examples).

Entries have been arranged and classified according to three different categories: Section A presents a list of general bibliographies and filmographies on the subject; Section B includes general studies or those presenting a historical overview; and Section C lists all writings dealing with individual plays. If an essay in Section C treats more than one play, it will be classified under the first one by alphabetical order. Accordingly, a system of cross-references has been included at the end of each particular play to locate any other general articles or books on it. Where appropriate, annotations are added to explain the contents of a book or to provide information about the adaptation(s) under discussion.

This bibliography could not have been compiled without the help of different individuals and institutions. Sofía Muñoz Valdivieso deserves my most sincere thanks for the materials she brought from Temple University (Philadelphia). Cristina Sánchez Herrera typed part of the manuscript and her keen critical eye saved me from a few inaccuracies. I should also like to thank the following institutions and their staff for their kindness and efficiency: the Folger Shakespeare Library, the Library of Congress, Dr. Susan Brock at the Shakespeare Institute, the British Library and the University of London Library. Finally, I would like to thank the Committee on Research Fellowships of the Folger Shakespeare Library for awarding me a short-term fellowship which allowed me to travel to the United States, and the Spanish Ministry of Education and Culture (DGICYT, PS94-0106) for funding the research carried out for the writing of the present article.
